Mary and her followers throw a lariat to Terence and help him out of the torrent. Bud offers the plane to Terence but the rustlers get there first and Terence seizes their motorcycle and escapes.

Taggart squeals to the sheriff that Marshall is over the border in his own ranch house. Several loyal Indians, discovering that the sheriff is out for Marshall, dash to the ranch and warn their friend. Marshall decides to surrender being tired of evading the law's arm for fifteen years.

Stella Montross, an adventuress, demands $25,000 from Taggart, who is to act as Marshall's lawyer, or she will supply the evidence which will allow Marshall to go free. Taggart promises to have the money for her and impresses Mary with the fact that this evidence will help her father.

She sends Terence to the bank to get the money. He is held up by Taggart's gang and carried across the border. All this happens while Mary's father is being tried. Loyal friends discover the whereabouts of Terence and rescue him while he is being carried off. In a battle in the speeding automobile, some of the men are knocked out, and over a cliff.
